Video Title: Why do People Around the World Dress Differently

Video Link: <https://youtu.be/gi0XtSShmzc>

If you were to leave the United States, you would find that a lot of kids dress pretty similar to you.

Jeans, T-shirts and sneakers are common clothing worn every day all around the world.

But, in other places, you will find the people dress very differently than you, and this can be for a large variety of reasons.

In the hot deserts of the Middle East, many people like to wear light-colored, loose-fitting clothing.

This type of clothing keeps you cool amid the warm weather.

In the Siberian tundra of Russia, people wear thick coats and furry hats.

As the cold wind blows, these types of clothing keep people warm.

All over the world, people dress for the climate they live in.

In other parts of the world, people wear certain types of clothing according to their culture.

In India, it is common for women to wear a piece of clothing called a Sari.

It is a long piece of fabric that is wrapped around a woman's body and head.

In Africa, many tribes have special ceremonial clothing that uses beads or feathers.

In Tonga, men and women wear a ta'ovala for special occasions.

It is a straw mat that they wrap around their waist like a skirt.

As you learn more about the different ways people dress, you are able to learn more about their environment, culture, and traditions.

It sure would be boring if all of us dressed the same.
